Phase-field modeling of cellular migration in two-dimensional and three-dimensional extracellular matrix environments. Cell migration is a dynamic process of numerous critical biological processes, including embryonic development and wound healing. In recent years, chemotaxis has been employed to understand and model cell migration in response to a variety of chemical signals. We have developed a phase-field model to simulate cell migration in the presence of a gradient in the extracellular matrix (ECM). We have implemented the model using a finite element-based numerical approach that is capable of handling large deformation and contact between neighboring cells. We have demonstrated the capabilities of the model by simulating embryo development and wound healing. We have shown that the number of cell-cell interactions is critically dependent on cell migration speed. We also have
